REMOVING THE DEBRIS.

Work of Clearing Away the Wreckage Pushed Forward.

The Big Army of Workers Makes but Little Progress.

The Cool Weather Still Continues in Johnstown.

An Undertaker Detected Robbing the Dead Bodies.

[illegible]

Johnstown, June 8. The day opened with cheerly rain and thunder storms. The hot sun streams were filled to topping their banks. The air is cooler and [illegible] but to the busy workers it is certainly pleasant. And the cool weather is contributing to prevent the decomposition of the hundreds of human bodies yet unrecovered and of the thousands of carcasses which perished in the flood.

At 9 o'clock this morning five bodies had been taken from the mass at the stone bridge. A large force of men have been working all day on this but so great is the quantity of wreckage that comparatively slow progress is being made. A quantity of powerful disinfectants is being used with good effect.

The government civil engineers have begun the construction of pontoon bridges with pontoons brought from the east. It is expected that all the necessary bridges will be constructed today. From Bolivar to Johnstown the sidetracks of the Pennsylvania railroad are filled with cars loaded with lumber, furniture and goods of all descriptions for the sufferers. The sun came out with a fierce heat about 10 o'clock.

Affairs at the stone bridge wreckage pile seem to have resolved themselves into a state of almost hopelessness. It is amazing the routine into which everything has fallen in this particular place. Every morning at 7 o'clock a dozen or fifteen men mechanically from their tents and tents on the bare hillside, and wearily and weakly go to work clearing away this mass, and at the rate they are now proceeding it will actually be months before the debris is cleared away and the last body found. It may be good business and good policy to have these few workers fool around the edge of this wreckage for five or ten minutes adjusting a dynamite blast, then hastily scramble away and consume as much more time before the tremendous roar announces that the ugly work is done but the onlooker doubts it. Sometimes when an extra large shot is used the water hits of wood and iron and other shapes more fearfully suggestive fly directly upward in a solid column at least 300 feet high only to fall back again into almost the same spot to be dragged and pulled at or coaxed to float down the unwilling current that is falling so rapidly now that even this poor mode of egress will soon be wanting.

The fact of the matter is simply this. They are not attempting to recover the bodies at the bridge but as one blast tears yards of stuff into flinders it is shoved indifferently into the water, be it human or brute, stone, or iron, to float down towards Pittsburg, or to sink to the bottom as may be a few yards from where it was pushed off from the main pile. Up in the center of the town the debris is piled even higher than at the stone bridge but the work is going on fairly well. The men seem to be working more together and enter into the spirit of the thing. Besides this, horses and wagons can get at the wrecks and it really looks as if this part of the town has been cinderized, and some of the firemen there say that at the present rate of work going on through the town all the bodies that ever will be recovered will be found within the next ten days. As to the condition these bodies are in it has become almost a matter of indifference except as to the effect they may have upon the health of the living. The facilities are so limited that but little sanitary precaution can be taken and the doctors say that an epidemic of some kind must result.

An alarming report has just reached here that diphtheria has broken out in the crowded camp in the town, and the facts in the case cannot be sent until later as everybody is excited and fright end just now. The doctors, however, take no pains to conceal the fact that disease is the only enemy now. The wreckage can be and is being rapidly cleared away and with the splendid discipline, under trying circumstances, now in force the only thing that can stop it is pestilence of some sort. It is said that many cases of fever diphtheria and pneumonia are being concealed from the people here for fear that a panic may seize the workers, and if this should happen it is probable that nobody would attempt to touch the work here, perhaps for months. Disinfectants of all kinds are being freely used by carbolic and in addition to this a score of blazing piles in every direction show that the purifying element of fire is being applied as rapidly as possible for the safety of the living.

Everything here has now become a mere matter of routine. It is simply a case of time. Everything is routine and everything comes in its regular order. Getting up in the morning, going to work eating when eatables can be purchased, begged or stolen, and last and greatest, even the finding of a body or parts thereof, horrid in all its fearful details and incidents, even this is now routine and is the only cause of comment among newsgatherers while to those interested in the sight it means only another burial. All work was resumed today in the shops of the Cambria iron company's mammoth steel mill and repairs to buildings are being made with rapidity. Vice President Stackhouse of the Cambria iron company was asked how many men he had lost by the flood he replied "The roll will probably reach a thousand and a half." A trip was made today for a crucified undertaker who was robbing bodies in the Fourth ward morgue. A female was brought in and buried. It was proved to be [illegible] and the funeral was placed in some of the morgues. The undertaker was arrested on the charge of robbing the body. He was detected in the act of stealing the jewelry and promptly arrested by the police who immediately took him to the lockup.

It is not clear that those who have not registered are dead, for many had left this section before the system of registration began. Already from 12 to 15 passes have been issued to people who wished to leave. In some cases passes were issued to the same person twice. Many were compelled to return for some [illegible]

The Scottdale Fire.

Pittsburg, June 8. The street [illegible] Scottdale [illegible] Where the flames [illegible] was seen carrying a [illegible] house that [illegible] commenced shooting at him [illegible] shots he dared [illegible] the house [illegible] Meanwhile the Opera House [illegible] the Pittsburg and National banks [illegible] entrance. He ordered him to [illegible] the man drew a revolver. The officer took it away from him and led him toward the county jail. The man struck the policeman in the face, knocked him down and then ran. The officer fired three shots at him and brought him to a standstill. Among the heaviest losers are the Occidental hotel, $150,000; San Francisco store, $100,000; coal bankers, $150,000; Tokles, Singerman & Co., $50,000; Chester Cherry, $200,000; [illegible] F. Frye, $5,000; Schwabacher Bros. & Co., $250,000; H. Hershberger, $75,000; Scottdale Hardware Co., $75,000; Frankenthal Bros., $80,000; W. H. Boyd, $75,000; Watson C. Squires, $90,000; McDonald & Co., $75,000; Scottdale Improvement Co's coal bunkers and office $150,000 and the opera house $75,000.

A spectator looking southward from Union street can see in the far distance a mile of nothing but miles of charred heat rails warped and torn, and telegraph and telephone wires. As far as it is possible to estimate at present not less than 250 firms and persons doing business have suffered loss, the majority of them being total. Relief in the way of money, provisions, bedding, tents, etc., is pouring in from all directions.

Cronin Inquest.

Chicago, June 8.—Peter Metchan was on the stand in the Cronin inquest this morning. He testified that he came here from Philadelphia as the result of a quarrel about a woman. He did not say before leaving that he was going on a dangerous work for the executive committee. One day Cronin met him on the street and accused him of coming here to murder him (Cronin). On the night of the murder the witness was in Pullman. Near the close of his testimony McGeehan admitted that in his camp at Philadelphia he was known as No 1 and John O'Neill as No 2. At the close of McGeehan's testimony the hearing was adjourned until Monday and McGeehan was taken into custody.

Chicago, June 8.—McGeehan was taken this evening to the chief's private office, where Carlson, Dinan and Mrs Conklin were allowed to take a look at him. None of them, however, identified him and he was allowed to go.

The police have at last found the clothes worn by Cronin when he last left his office. The garments are all blood stained and were discovered in a lot of garbage found by a scavenger, just where the police refuse to say. The scavenger gave the stained apparel to a neighbor German who washed out the blood as best she could and gave them to her husband to wear. The husband's new suit excited suspicion among some of his associates who informed the police. Cronin's coat when found and before being repaired by the house wife had been cut from neck to wrist. The vest had nearly been severed in twain and the underclothing had been cut in a similar manner. If any inference can be drawn from the conduct of the police it may be assumed as true that valuable clues have been developed by the discovery of these uncanny relics.

[illegible] Stock Sold.

New York, June 8.—This afternoon it was authoritatively stated that the stockholders of the Southern White Lead company of St Louis and Chicago, have sold their stock to the National Lead trust. This company has very large works and its output of white and red lead for several years past, has been much the largest in the United States, if not in the world. The Eckstein company of Cincinnati also signed a contract to sell to the trust and word reaches here that negotiations looking to the absorption of the Atlantic mills of Brooklyn are on foot. By these acquisitions the trust gains control of over 90 per cent of the white lead output of the United States.

New Mail Route.

Montreal, June 8.—Pridham of Australia is here making inquiries about the Canadian Pacific as a mail route in behalf of Australia. He says there is a very great feeling of annoyance in Australia against the American government for not assisting the mail service between the two countries.

Victoria's Message of Sympathy.

Washington, D. C., June 8.—Minister Pauncefote, the British minister called on the president this morning and delivered a message from Queen Victoria expressing her deep sympathy for the sufferers by the recent flood in Pennsylvania. The president made a suitable acknowledgment in behalf of the United States.

Portions of a Body Found.

London, June 8.—The left hand and arm of the Fisher woman, portions of whose body have been found in different parts of the Thames, was taken from the river this morning. Another fragment supposed to belong to the same body was also discovered in Sir Percy Shelley's garden in Chelsea.

YESTERDAY'S GUESTS.

The I. T. U. Excursionists Trouble Reaching the City.

A Big Excursion Driven Over the Best Part of the City.

Visit Made to the Proposed Site for the Printer's Home.

Picnic in Cheyenne Canon Spoiled by the Rain.

Yesterday was a great day for the printers and a day that will long be remembered and talked about in every printing office of importance in the land. Delegates of the largest printers' unions of the United States and Canada were here and with them some members of the Denver union and their wives, sweethearts and friends making one of the largest excursions of northern people of the state that ever visited the city. It is not often that Colorado Springs people have to wish for a rainy day and we get it but yesterday was an exception. The weather never did behave so unmanfully and even the oldest inhabitant was put to the blush in finding excuses for it. Every arrangement had been made for the reception of the International Typographical union yesterday that could be, but who can foretell what the elements and the railroads will do? The morning broke cloudy and threatening but all hoped that by the middle of the day the heavens would clear. At half past nine information was received by the officers of the board of trade that a section of the expected excursion had arrived in the city over the Rio Grande, railroad and that the portion to come over the Santa Fe had met with a delay and that no one could tell when it would arrive. This was a half hour earlier than they had expected them to arrive, and there was a hurrying of carriages and committees to the depot. Arriving there it was learned that the Rio Grande section with about one hundred persons had arrived. They stated that the section on the Santa Fe was further back on the road. That the train was off the track at Sedalia on account of the crumbling of the rails, and that a train from Palmer Lake would have to run back on the Rio Grande and bring them to this city. After considerable telegraphing it was finally learned that they would arrive shortly after 12 o'clock. The people in the first section were then put in carriages and taken over the route outlined in yesterday morning's paper. After looking at the most beautiful streets in the city they were taken to the school section east of the Deaf Mute institute which it is proposed to offer for the home for indigent printers. The ride to the grounds was greatly enjoyed, but the view was almost spoiled by the clouds which hung over the mountains.

Arriving at the grounds the visitors were given plenty of opportunity to inspect the premises. When the guests were finally collected Captain M. L. De Courcey made a few remarks. He pointed out the land on which they were standing as the gift that would be made the International body if it would locate the home upon it. The land extended three quarters of a mile north and south and half a mile east and west. It had a value of more than $30,000, and there was sufficient of it to build the home, with magnificent grounds, and leave a surplus that could be platted and sold for enough to make the union rich. The question was also looked at from other points, and the great advantages to be derived from the moral and healthful surroundings were pointed out. Captain De Courcey's remarks evidently made considerable impression, and all present were free to express themselves that it was hardly possible for the union to receive a better offer.

At 12 o'clock the portion of the excursion which had started over the Santa Fe arrived. They stated that the train had stopped on account of bad ties and in a very dangerous place on the road. They were thankful to have gotten off with only a few hours delay. This was the largest and most important section but they were hurriedly put into carriages and driven through the city. The first and second sections were joined in the southern part of the city and the parade at that time numbered about five carriages and was upward of a mile in length. With every carriage was a citizen of Colorado Springs who pointed out the various attractions. After the sections joined the line of march was taken up to North Cheyenne canon. The beauties of the drive and the canon could hardly be realized, on account of the heavy clouds rapidly settling down, but expressions of wonder from the eastern and southern delegates were unlimited. Just as the picnic grounds were reached the rain began to fall. Manager Barnett, of The Antlers hotel, had prepared a splendid lunch, and as there was no time to be lost every one fell to with a will as the long drive had made all hungry. The rain spoiled everything however and it did not take a great while for the tables, guests and everything else to present a soaked and desolate appearance. The programme of speeches that had been prepared had to be abandoned and all scurried back to town as rapidly as possible. The guests took the misfortune philosophically—as the craft has the habit of doing in most things—and good naturedly laughed about it. All seemed to appreciate the effort that had been made, and expressed the greatest regret that it should be marred. They hardly realized, however that the loss was theirs, in that they missed the b[illegible]

Silurian Poland.

Special Correspondence.

The woes of Poland are not so entirely a matter of ancient history as people are apt to imagine. Persecution of a certain modern kind, and possibly in that unhappy country, there is no doubt that it is just the sort that can be most easily given effect. In Russia it behoves people of all classes are forbidden to speak Polish. Servants, coachmen and [illegible] are urged by the Russian officials to watch for and report any case in which their employers use the forbidden tongue, even in private and in every case the offender is fined and the informer rewarded. So rigid is the rule that a poor old woman who knelt on the pavement before a chapel in Wilna and said her prayers aloud in Polish was taken to the guard house and only discharged after a severe reprimand. Old men who are in the habit of saying their prayers twice in the churches have begun to find it very [illegible]. A boy has been expelled from school for writing his name in Polish on one of his books.

This sounds almost incredible, but it is hardly worse than the persecution now going on under the banner of liberal Prussia, that country which professes to recognize most of the liberality of the government and practices of the [illegible]. An unlucky priest, Stanislaus [illegible], was fined 47 francs because [illegible] his text. Fifteen. He was condemned for trying to Polish [illegible]. The sentence was so absurd that it was afterward reversed. Another priest, a bookseller in Gnesen, who had to give evidence in a local court, declined to testify in German, on the ground that he did not understand the language enough. For this he was sentenced to a day's imprisonment with the threat of a longer term. Thereupon he [illegible] testify in German, but with such [illegible] that he might be allowed to repeat it all in Polish. [illegible] books in Polish have been suppressed as hostile to the empire, and German as favoring the Polish propaganda.

This sort of persecution looks [illegible] so shocking and horrible as the old fashioned kind by which one and the same land Poles have been at various times put to the sword, shot, hanged and imprisoned, but it is likely to be far more effective in securing the end aimed at. When the national language is stifled in the tongues of a people and forbidden in their literature, national unity traditions and aspirations can hardly long survive. Poland's conquerors are not less determined or cruel than before—they are wiser and more cunning, and they will denationalize Poland.

More Charges Against Some of Denver's Ex-Policemen.

An Alleged Plan to Rob the German National Bank.

Two Officers Brothers Reported to Have Been Indicted.

Denver, June 8.—The Times this morning publishes the following: Mr Wm Lawrence, real estate [illegible] National bank. They were [illegible] Lockup [illegible] charge with the other [illegible]. Dr Was given [illegible] Connors were so well known [illegible] instead been made [illegible] a prominent elk house. They were now given up for the Kansas express job.

[illegible] Dan and Charley Connors are not the Charley [illegible] of the Republican of a couple [illegible] in the former case being the [illegible] and in the latter [illegible]. The Times also announces that the grand jury now in session at a late hour this afternoon found true bills against both of the Connors and that their arrest will be made today or tomorrow.

Last evening there arrived in Denver a gentleman of decidedly questionable character, by the name of John [illegible] who might perhaps be the scion of the "first family" lineage but the sobriquet under which Mr Johnson is known is "Stagger." He is a full fledged brother in law of Jim Marshall, of Kansas City, and no doubt in the city for the purpose of keeping Mr Marshall posted on the doings of the Denver police. Chief Farley was informed of the arrival of Mr Johnson and "Stagger" exhibited a desire to death one time but the jury acquitted him on the ground of self-defence.

The Benefit Concert.

A magnificent effort was made last night by three young ladies, Miss Mina Ehrlicher, Miss Kieffer and Miss Shively to swell the relief fund which Colorado Springs is sending to the Johnstown sufferers. These young ladies gave a concert in The Antlers music room which will long be remembered by those at it as one of the most successful entertainments ever given here. The rainy weather kept many away, unfortunately. A piano solo "Rondo Capriccio" by Mendelssohn by Miss Ehrlicher was the first number on the programme. Miss Ehrlicher's brilliant execution delicate coloring and touch are well known here and her numbers gained her many new friends. Her rendition of Raff's "La Fileuse" received a well merited encore. Miss Shively, a visitor here, as a charming elocutionist, of her several numbers the most pleasing was "The Chariot Race" from "Ben-Hur." "Serenade" Wieniawski, was the first of Miss Kieffer's violin solos, played with rare feeling. "The Wedding March," from "Lohengrin," was applauded to the echo. After the last number on the programme hats were passed and $100 was contributed. The concert was a decided success both artistically and financially. Too much credit cannot be given the young ladies whose unaided efforts met with so flattering results. Colonel Kerby, of London, a guest of the hotel, made a few remarks in a happy vein, complimenting and thanking the young ladies for the pleasure given.

District Court.

The special term of the district court will commence tomorrow morning with Judge Campbell presiding and Judge Butler to assist him. A large number of both criminal and civil cases are to be tried, the civil business especially having accumulated during the past year. The trial of Kelly, the Manitou dynamite murderer will probably come off and also the two Florissant robbers. The following is a list of the petit jurors drawn:

F. A. Waters	A. L. Hubbard.
A. J. Andrew	D. F. Burson.
[illegible] Gale	John Westfall.
Alvero Hennaway	F. L. Martin

Mr James Cassily has arranged for a racing matinee to be given on Perry Park's driving track one week from tomorrow for the benefit of the Johnstown sufferers. Among the fine horses entered will be those owned by Mr Cassily, Perry Johnson, J. E. Hundley and others. In fact owners of horses of any class will be invited to enter them and races will be made accordingly. If a sufficient large sum of money can be raised in this way there is no doubt but a very successful day's racing can be arranged and further notice of the [illegible] will be given. He will go anywhere in the state with his horse if his expenses are paid, or he will pay the expenses of anyone being invited to this city for that purpose.

Mr Joseph Stevens left last night for the east over the Rock Island to spend the summer.

Miss Farnham left for Morristown N. J. last night to attend the wedding of Miss Donaghe to Mr McClure.

JOB WORK

The New York delegates who were here yesterday had printed on their cards that they were "Democratic Hill."

On June 26th the prohibitory amendment to the constitution of the state of Rhode Island will be submitted to a vote of the people. But as it requires a three fifths vote to repeal the amendment the chances are not good for that. There has undoubtedly been a growth of temperance sentiment among the people and lovers of law and order in favor of the repeal of this amendment as it has invited a much more lawless and law breaking than ever existed before.

The recent banquet given Mr. Cleveland has called forth a good many editorial opinions regarding his chances for the democratic nomination in 1892. The general opinion seems to be that he will not get the nomination because he did not carry his own state last year. But this is not a very wise one, though it may be the popularly accepted one. Mr. Cleveland ran fourteen thousand votes behind Governor Hill. Anyone who has studied the election returns in New York knows that the reason of this was not because Governor Hill was any more popular with the democracy than President Cleveland. It happened that the unscrupulous element in the party in New York were for Governor Hill and these unscrupulous men were willing to trade anybody or anything to secure his election. The republicans saw very early that it was very much better to carry the national ticket for Harrison than to elect either the republican candidate for governor or the republican candidate for mayor of New York. As a result, they traded everything and everybody for votes for the national ticket and in that way carried New York. The contest between the candidates for mayor in the county democracy and the Tammany democracy did as much to defeat Cleveland as the swapping made by Hill's friends. It is a mistake to blame the defeat on Cleveland. It was due to a disloyal democracy and to a very able and unselfish republican canvass for the national ticket.

One of the most extraordinary opinions regarding the strength of this country has recently been given in a letter to the St. James (London) Gazette. It is written by an Englishman who says he has spent many years in this country and so speaks from knowledge and experience. As he sums up the result of a war with Great Britain, where would be, he says, "For one crown that the Americans could put on the ocean, the English could put twenty," and thinks that our navy would have no show whatever in a contest with England. He also thinks that the army would be unmanageable to discipline, "to whom plenty of good excuses for mutiny would be supplied by the army contractors." Just why this Englishman should entertain this latter opinion is difficult to understand. For we had for four years about three million of men under arms on both sides, and there was no mutiny, though the army contractors were about as unprincipled as they are in any country, owing to the fact that the supplies were needed so soon. This wise man also says that "there are differing and jarring interests in the Republic which are naturally disposed to split into halves and quarters," and that "the shaking up which foreign war would give its rather crazy institutions, would be an excellent opportunity for malcontent states to get loose from one another." The "jarring elements" consist of the southern and western, or silver states, the negro population, the foreign agricultural population and the red man. The letter is so ridiculous in its opinions that it is rather remarkable that a paper of any standing should publish it. Englishmen would do well to get their ideas of America through Mr. Bryce's book.

It appears by very recent school statistics that the increase of illiteracy in Massachusetts has been nearly sixteen per cent in ten years and that there are now about one hundred and twenty five thousand illiterate people. It is needless to say that three fourths of these are Irish and Canadian. The people in Massachusetts are very much stirred up about it. It is rather a misfortune that there are not more. This country seems utterly indifferent, so far as taking any positive measures are concerned, to the vast hordes of ignorant people who are coming to us from all parts of Europe. We not only encourage them in coming but we give them the right to vote not only before they can read our constitution, but before they can speak our language. This population is the most dangerous voting class in this country and invites all manner of corrupt methods in our elections. There is no difference to the most of them in the various pieces of paper that are offered them to vote and they are ready to vote any of them for a consideration. It is all very well to speak of our extending the blessings of our country to the oppressed people of all lands but the blessings should not be extended any faster than we can give them assimilated with the opportunity to be [illegible] by them. To dilute our population with these ignorant, corrupt people, means that our institutions will be weakened if not overthrown and therefore, that we shall not be the hope of the people in other parts of the world who are striving to solve the problem of self government. Too much is at stake in free government for us to risk all the experiment hope by unnecessarily lax laws regarding the admission of foreigners. The greatest favor that we have yet noticed in the ruling of the Supreme Court was that they the National Government cannot take Contra to [illegible] Europe and to Italy [illegible] than a violation of one of our contract laws. Let us permit no Italian to come to this country and vote when he does not know [illegible] months and knows nothing whatever of the merits of the question of which he votes.

MRS. TANNER'S RHYMES.

She is [illegible] of the

[illegible] Husband's [illegible]

has delivered [illegible] on Sunday one as her husband's speechmaker in Connecticut, where, [illegible] his campaign in Washington, she [illegible] exclaimed:

"Marie Tanner! Do not come. I will take your place."

And she did, [illegible] a new lecture in verse on solid ears, and especially the duty of the government towards them. Mrs. Tanner has four children, ranging from ten years old [illegible] ten, but she finds some time to serve in Civil A. R., and to her other friends, the Woman Suffragists.

I heard her lecture this week on this latter question—it was a rhythmical and rhymed argument in the dialect of an old fashioned New England farmer, a controversy between Cousin Betsy, after the fashion of Lowell or Carlton. Betsy's grammar was [illegible] out of joint, but she had lots of facts and a shrewd wit and sarcasm that ruined to derision John's ridiculous claims to superiority.

I have heard her [illegible] the G. A. R., too. It is a heroic character [illegible] and the memories of war thus are emphasized by the stream of the old veteran. Corporal and Mrs. Tanner seem [illegible] contrasts like their predecessors, Gen. and Mrs. Black. Gen. Black is one of the most eloquent of orators, and his wife an accomplished reciter and each is proud of the attainments and ability of the other. Corporal Tanner is an eloquent man, facile and vigorous of speech, careful and [illegible] of articulation, and with a rich and ringing voice capable of pathetic modulation; and Mrs. Tanner seems likely to will distinction in current polite social life. Mrs. Tanner has a comely and attractive personality, a large head finely poised upon ample shoulders, and a square face in which strength of purpose and decision of character are [illegible] marked. She wears her brown hair brushed back from a high forehead in a style of which Madame Pompadour's Coiffure was an illustrious example.

Commissioner and Mrs. Tanner have gone to Georgetown to live, and there they will take the boys and girls and [illegible] hold pets and penates in a [illegible], stately old mansion in the middle of two acres of lawn.

One of the prominent figures in the vernal begins was that of Senator Ingalls, who has at last pulled up his lares, etc., and gone to Kansas with his wife and seven children.

I made a bachelor's call and spent a pleasant hour the other evening at their deserted home opposite the Capitol. The Senator was out making the last arrangements, and the pretty little girls swarmed over the house, exhilarated over the moment of [illegible].

Now, Mrs. Ingalls [illegible] a lady of the party, [illegible] appetite, but say a little good to do you are doing your last packing."

"No, I [illegible]," she said, "and have not [illegible] packed. Everything is packed. Mr. Ingalls did it. I tell you it is a great thing to have a husband who is so helpful in [illegible] emergencies."

"How does he get time for everything?" I asked.

"It puzzles me," said Mrs. Ingalls, "but he does. I am not [illegible] of my life, that I married a man who is not a good buyer" [illegible] such as at this character and of the Order of American Legislators.

She was right. Mr. Ingalls has fairly spoiled [illegible] careful housekeeper. He can't [illegible] a horse or a dog, and [illegible] a house as it should be to suit the superintendence, the cutting [illegible] of wood at home and the running of a farm. To be an editor and a lawyer is a [illegible] place, but for [illegible] to be out in [illegible] and match it [illegible]. What [illegible] of that? He buys [illegible] carpets and portieres, and [illegible] furniture. He can do the marketing. [illegible] and then he picks out a house [illegible] and invites it home to me. He can select the girls' clothes as well as I can.

"One day when I was [illegible] at Atchison, a big box came to me by express from Washington. I opened it and found two dresses, but [illegible] dresses. I said new I saw at once that a mistake had been made, for I had [illegible] my costumes, and I began to [illegible] them away again and wait till the address was corrected. When Mr. Ingalls came up from [illegible] I got the [illegible] to him [illegible] lovely lace [illegible] but said I [illegible] they fitted me [illegible] for I did. They fitted [illegible] of the inquiry [illegible] Washington a month [illegible] and the [illegible] carried them to the [illegible] measure and there [illegible] dress? ment printing office. From that [illegible] every daughter of the family knocked off work and sat down to be supported by her—father, brothers and sisters. She stood it for two years, but when they had all settled thoroughly down to idleness, she resigned her position as housemaid and ran away and got married, and the indignant family of loafers execrated and abused her.

I sent for a tinker to repair my roof. He promised to come next day. He failed and I went after him. He promised again. Again he did not come. I sent once more to know the reason, and got the following note:

"Mr Cleaver and gent I do not care for the roof job I have. It let give up which gobs I am a waiting for a job in the Indian department."

So on all sides. Everybody is waiting for a Government job and neglecting work.

The life of a [illegible] scribbler in Washington has its [illegible] of amusement, is scarcely worth living. Public Printer Benedict says to me: "When [illegible] at my office they [illegible] at my house. They waylaid me when I went home, and I found them sitting on my doorsteps in the morning. They made my sister miserable, and finally they lay in wait for the little girl often, to meet their girls into her ear and induce her to pray to me. The importunity became intolerable. It was a pleasure to get out of the reach of it at last, and now I know how to pity Mr. Palmer."

W. A. CROFFUT.

Job's Abused Wife.

Job was most [illegible] afflicted man, but as a partial compensation for it, he has had the sympathy of the human race for 4,000 years. But it has not been so with Job's wife. Nobody has ever spoken a kind word of her. On the contrary, she has been held up for forty centuries as a horrible example. But for all that, we are confident the poor woman deserves a better place in history than she has ever occupied. If she was sour-tempered, she had cause to give an acid tinge to her disposition. She was made to drink the dregs from a very bitter cup, and it is possible that she bore her troubles with about as much equanimity as the average woman would do.

In the first place, she was suddenly reduced from luxury to penury. Any unfortunate woman who has suffered this ordeal knows just the frame of mind poor Mrs. Job was in.

In the next place she was bereft of her children. There is no grief so hard to assuage as that which falls on a mother's heart when the grave hides her children from her sight.

In addition to this accumulation of sorrows, she was left with an invalid husband on her hands. Job was covered with boils, and experience has taught us that there is no more exasperating patient than a man with a boil on him. There are wives, and good wives, too, in this Christian land of ours, whose lives have been made most miserable for days and weeks at a time by a husband and one boil. Just think, then, what this poor woman had to endure with only a large [illegible] boils on him! Is it any wonder that she woman encouraged her husband to terminate his existence? The only wonder is that she didn't cut her own throat in despair.

DUFFY'S MORAL PHILOSOPHY

Opinion of New York's Renowned Poet

He Says Gotham is Growing More Wicked and That it is the Mecca of Tramps, Mothers Who Sell Their Own Daughters [illegible]

[illegible]

The Marriage of Jefferson.

The first marriage of Jefferson was of a [illegible] character. After graduating at West Point he was ordered to Fort Crawford at Prairie du Chien, Wis., the post then commanded by Col. Zachary Taylor. The young daughter of the latter, Miss Sallie Knox Taylor, at once fell desperately in love with the handsome and intellectual young lieutenant, and the affection was reciprocated, but the old Colonel was averse to any match-making under the circumstances and peremptorily forbade Davis from visiting his quarters except in an official capacity. The lovers managed to see each other by strategem, however, and one morning at daylight they were missing. The household was aroused, the premises investigated and a search made, but nothing was elicited save that the door of the stable was open, four horses were gone and their tracks indicated a hasty departure. Further examination of the premises showed that Henry George Wilson, brother of Thomas W. Wilson, of Dubuque, Ia., and Miss Sarah, daughter of Geneva Street, had also mysteriously disappeared. There was but one conclusion, and in less than an hour every man, woman and child in the village knew all about the runaway match.

Coins or tokens made of porcelain have been current in various parts of the world. The Worcester Porcelain Company issued shilling and two shilling tokens in the year 1796. They read:

"I promise to pay the bearer on demand two shillings
(or one shilling)
at the China

and on the other side—"W. P. C." in raised letters.

Shortsightedness and Tight Collars.

Professor Dr. Forster, director of the University Ophthalmic Clinique at Breslau has recently drawn the attention of parents and professors to what he believes is often the cause of short sightedness in the young family, that they are allowed to wear collars which are too tight for them. In cases that had come under his notice the patients were suffering from a chronic complaint, brought on by a disturbance in the regular and normal flow of blood caused by the wearing of collars which were too tight enough.

How Acid May be Found in Vinegar.

Sulphuric acid may be detected in vinegar by moistening white paper with the suspected vinegar and drying it before not coals or on a hot plate. If one hundredth part of the vinegar is sulphuric acid the paper will turn brown or black. It will be a good plan to wet part of the piece of paper with vinegar and part of it with water as the not to confound the darkening of the paper by heat with the charring due to sulphuric acid. This test is more sensitive if the vinegar has been concentrated by evaporation. A [illegible] may be evaporated by a gold test.

Blasting by Freezing.

In Scandinavia the quarrymen sometimes get Dame Nature to do [illegible] the stones for them. They drill a row of holes close together in the rock at right angles to the plane of stratification, fill the holes with water, and allow the expansion due to the water freezing to disrupt the mass. It has been suggested that the expedient might be resorted to even in countries where frost is not the normal state of the weather if artificial methods of freezing were adopted.

[illegible]

A hen always begins to wipe her feet when she goes on a newly made flower bed. At least she seems by her motions to be wiping her feet.

Smuggled Lace in a Coffin.

A Brussels lace merchant had received from a Belgian [illegible] in Paris an order for a large quantity of Malines lace. The goods were carefully packed in a lead coffin, which was deposited in the Paris addresses on the [illegible] express train [illegible].

The Paris merchant had to wait so long for the arrival of the "[illegible]" that he at length complained to the management of the Northern railway. [illegible] had been detained at the frontier owing to the [illegible] with certain proper and formalities relating to the transmission of corpses. Mining Engineer Arrested.

Denver, Colo., June 8.—J. P. Hutchinson, a well known mining operator during the Leadville excitement, was arrested here last night charged with passing bogus checks. He waived an examination to day and was bound over in the sum of $2,000.

JUDGE PATRICK GAVAN DUFFY.

gind to be committed. Do none of [illegible] have deliberately asked me to send them to the Island. After five thousand have similarly applied to the police magistrates of the city. All this is bad enough, but there is something worse behind. In various parts of New York are what is known as "alleys." These are cellars, [illegible] and garrets, dirty and full of d[illegible] where men and women are allowed to stay all night upon the implied condition that they will buy the stale beer and vitriolic whiskey which their proprietors sell in defiance of the law. No one knows how many of these monstrous places exist. Police Captain McCullagh, one of the best and most conscientious officials reported five years ago that there were over three hundred with an average patronage of thirty in his precinct alone. In one week of raids he made upon them, he arrested 2,300 inmates and then told me that there were as many left as he had captured. When I had committed a majority of those to the Island, the authorities notified me not to send any more as they could not be accommodated. Both the captain and myself then found our hands tied and were unable to do anything further to cure the city of the scourge mentioned.

Another and more ominous fact is the increase of immorality among what are called the educated refined and wealthy classes. It is difficult to tell the story in black and white. The desire for excitement and above all for novel [illegible] becomes a disease and produces effects that are simply incredible. I have had over fifty cases before my bar in which mothers have sold their daughters for base purposes; forty in which sisters were thus put upon the market and at least two hundred where wives were made the subjects of bargain and sale. I presume that other police magistrates have had the same experience.

Besides these cases in which the matter was the direct issue there have been scores as many in which the same facts appeared incidentally. In nearly all of these transactions the parties involved belonged to what is termed the better class of society. Scarcely ever does the workingman or workingwoman appear as a character in the awful drama. On the contrary the actors are refined, educated people, and all of them are [illegible] with the [illegible] of physical name. There are here and there noteworthy exceptions. One I shall never forget, owing to its tragic character and termination. A married woman who lived in magnificent style in Albany, left her husband by death. He was a [illegible] enough gentleman to give him a decent funeral. She was incapable of [illegible] and so drifted into the ranks of the lost. Instead of leaving her daughter, a beautiful girl of thirteen, follow her example, she placed her in one of the finest educational institutions of the State. Here the girl was taught every accomplishment and grace. After five years had elapsed the story of her mother's career was conveyed to the college by two men, brothers of students, who to their shame, he it said, were patrons of the unfortunate woman. The girl was ostracised and in a fit of shame and sorrow ran away to New York, where she followed the example of her mother. The latter followed her and had her arrested and brought before me. I committed her to a reformatory institution for a year, during which time her mother turned over a new leaf and began an honest life. The girl was released and with her mother is now living a legitimate livelihood.

If these [illegible] are [illegible] that the community makes little or no effort in the direction of amelioration. Ministers give no remedy for vice or crime, the law breaks [illegible] of society that is at its furthest [illegible] reptiles. While the various forms of wrongdoing vary indefinitely according to the commercial position of the times and according to what may be called criminal fashion, for there is fashion in crime just as much as in bonnets and silk hats, the ratio of crimes and criminals rise and fall with the whole population remains comparatively unaltered.

This is well illustrated in the case of bank frauds. Formerly there was a mighty of bank breakers, safe [illegible] and [illegible] thieves. Thanks to Inspector Byrnes and his distinguished staff of detectives, the [illegible] of industry now finds [illegible] gathering [illegible] are now definitely [illegible] cashiers [illegible]. The new evils [illegible] of both as to the [illegible] involved, [illegible] sustained by money [illegible].

There [illegible] improvement in [illegible] the statement will [illegible] people [illegible] in drunkenness.

Even [illegible] was [illegible] proper condition in [illegible] public receptions and [illegible] was not [illegible] damage to his [illegible].

The change [illegible] was illustrated in the [illegible] Court of Common Pleas. [illegible] the judge asked the [illegible] if he could prove beyond that week he had been drunk every day during the one preceding. Across the river in [illegible] a Brooklyn magistrate recently [illegible] stable for getting drunk [illegible] and falling down [illegible] the knight of the tipstaff [illegible] that he had got drunk [illegible] company with the judge's [illegible] brother. Such [illegible] in any court in the [illegible] state to day would be absolute impossibilities.

But there is another side to this improvement if improvement there be. The opprobrium cast by society has caused a [illegible] to forsake alcohol for other and more dangerous stimulants. The police magistrate is now confronted with opium-shakers, laudanum-drinkers, hashish-eaters and the slaves of bromides, chloral-hydrate, chloroform, ether, cocaine and other deadly drugs. If the word intoxication were used in its etymological sense, "being poisoned," instead of being restricted to the alcoholic phase, I am certain that its ratio to the population would be the same if not greater than it was when the desire for physical excitement was confined to the use of spirituous liquors.

The same condition of affairs exists in regard to vice. The improvement at which optimistic thinkers raise so largely and loudly is merely superficial. There has been a vast improvement in its outward mien. The street walker I long disfigures the great thoroughfares, and the [illegible] which [illegible] night blossom without [illegible] and orgies are now compelled to be quiet and respectable in appearance and behavior. In this respect New York has become the most moral city of the civilized world. The startling change for the better is due partly to the efforts of the police, partly to the action of public opinion, but chiefly to the discovery that vice is a far better paying investment when clothed in respectability and style than when displayed in [illegible] rags. For this reason New York has become the Mecca of all depraved [illegible] in the United States. Last week over fifty cases came before me, partially, in which a woman was the chief malefactor. In every case they were of out-of-town birth and breeding. In the prominent case, where a beautiful but wicked [illegible] attempted to avenge herself upon a man who had lost his affection for her by charging him with an attempt to murder her with poison, she proved to be from Frankfort, Kentucky, and her wife and complices from other parts of the Union.

A market of sale has occurred in the "[illegible]" industry as the practice of selling preter d counterfeit [illegible] has been happily termed. Only ten years ago there were hundreds engaged in the business, some of whom like Barney Maguire, Doc. Smythe and Tom Davis reaped handsome fortunes from their nefarious calling. Today, owing to wise legislation the vocation is well nigh dead.

The same rule applies to assaulting, highway robbery, manslaughter and in general to the commission of more brutal forms of crime. They belong to a bygone age and die out in the present one. Their followers go into new fields. But the amount or rather the ratio of crime and criminals to the population remains unaltered no matter how much the forms may change.

It may be asked if the criminals are irreclaimable. Under present conditions, they are most indubitably. The machinery for the reformation and punishment of crime are superb, those for its cure are laughable. Yet it need not be so. Every year millions are expended for the conversion of moral and well behaving Buddhists, Mohammedans, Brahmins and Confucians, who would be unpleasantly bettered if they were converted, which they never are, which might and could convert thousands of savages in this city who are fiercer, wickeder and worse than any heathen known. The most horrible tale of paganism never equalled the case of The People against Smith in my own court, in which a Christian-A[illegible] so called was convicted of having rubbed forming nitric acid into the arms of little boys in order to increase their value as beggars by having the limbs rot off in the presence of the public. What is needed is the regular visitation of the poor and suffering, the improvement in living quarters, the reduction of rents to conform with the reduction of wages that has gone on during the past decade, and a greater care and scrutiny over the training and nurture of the child.

THE FLEETING SHOW.

Gossip Picked Up Here and There—Talk Heard on the Street.

Sitting on the Veranda of The Antlers one day last week, smoking his pipe and enjoying Colorado sunshine I found Arent Sanders, senior member of the great German oil firm of August Sanders & Co. Mr. Sanders plays in a measure the same relation to the oil trade of Germany that Rockefeller does to the oil business of the United States. The Sanders company is the largest importing house of American oil on the continent. The senior member of the firm who is in this country with his family on a pleasure trip, told me that he has come to the United States to test and drop business for the time completely and so preferred to talk about anything but oil. However, to give some idea of the business done by his house Mr. Sanders said "We import annually 2,500,000 barrels. Now you will think that an immense amount but you must remember, that the German empire has no oil wells within its borders and the millions of people over which Emperor William rules have to draw their supply from other countries. There are a number of large oil importing houses in Germany but ours, the headquarters of which are in Hamburg, is the largest. We take our oil across the water by means of tank steamers. The vessels of our fleet have a capacity of from 10,000 to 28,000 barrels each. We use some Russian oil in Germany but not very much as it is too heavy for lighting purposes. I should say that a half million barrel annually would cover the entire amount of Russian oil used in Germany notwithstanding the fact that it is cheaper than your oil. No I do not care to talk about the Samoan dispute. Prince Bismarck never interests himself in the oil trade so I let statesmanship alone."

The unusual size of the glove worn by the Leadville club catcher has caused a good deal of comment from both the bleaching boards and grand stand. The glove looks more like a small mattress than a covering for the hand. It is what is known in professional circles as a "Kennedy mit" and is made somewhere in Nebraska. The chief feature about it is the wire frame upon which it is mounted. Over the wire frame heavy padding is placed and the outside is of course buckskin. Altogether it makes a very bowieldy affair and serves only to stop the force of a pitcher's ball, the other hand with a lighter glove being used to field the ball when it is stopped.—The manufacture of catchers' gloves has become quite an extensive trade. There are some eight or ten different styles and patents all of which are more or less popular with players. Dunrow "Kelly" Wilson uses a Spalding glove while Lyons uses a Bowen glove. The former is the one generally used in the National League. The gloves are as varied as the styles, ranging from $1, the price of the old Bum glove, up to $10, which is the price asked for the Kennedy mit, while the Spalding is $6.

Ex Congressman Henry E. Benner, of Ohio, said last week in answer to a question as to what kind of an impression he thought the Harrison administration was making: "Good, very good, I think. True, Mr. Harrison is not turning the democrats out fast enough to please some members of our party, but what is more to the point, he is keeping the party pledge. You hear no doubt here in Colorado as we do in Ohio that every member of the cabinet is devoting himself to the task of turning democrats out of office, but this is not a fact. I know that the changes have been comparatively few. I heard a prominent democrat who is in a position to know, say the other day that Mr. Cleveland had made himself unpopular because he refused to substitute democrats for republicans more rapidly, and that Mr. Harrison was destined to become just as unpopular, if not more so, because he was slower than Mr. Cleveland in making changes. No, the stories which are being circulated to the effect that Mr. Harrison is dividing the spoils without regard to the civil service laws or his party's pledges, is entirely false. There are many persons who will tell you that the appointment of Mr. Van Cott in New York was a notable violation of party promises. I happen to know that the influence brought to bear in that case was so strong that no president could ignore it. The influence came from some of the most prominent business men in both parties. It came from men whose motives could not be doubted. Personally, I am opposed to this civil service reform movement. It is a sham. I do not go so far as Jackson and say that to the victors belong the spoils, but I do say that it is mighty funny if we cannot find enough worthy and efficient republicans to fill every office within the gift of the administration. But I sat in the gallery at the Chicago gathering and saw the body adopt a platform pledging the party to civil service reform in terms that can not be misunderstood. Afterwards I read Mr. Harrison's letter of acceptance pledging himself personally to the so called reform. And still later I heard the party speakers on platforms through out the land promising that democrats should not be removed from offices which, in my opinion, belong to republicans. But whether the policy is right or wrong the party was pledged to it from A to Z and I am heartily glad that Mr. Harrison is strong enough to stand by those pledges. The next time the party nominates a president I hope they will do so with the understanding that if he is elected he will be allowed to fill all the offices from the ranks of his own party."

An exchange in speaking of the Minstrel company which will appear at the opera house tomorrow evening says: "When the aggregation of minstrels under the leadership of Arlington, Cotton & Kemble, came here several years ago they presented such an innovation upon the customs and stereotyped programmes of the minstrelsy of that time that for a long time they were taken as the standard of excellence from which other minstrel companies were judged. The appearance of the Thatcher Primrose & West minstrel company at the New Market theatre has established a new precedent of perfection in the minstrel world and it may be many months and years before another company will be seen that can be recorded as equal or superior to the aggregation which delighted the largest house of the season at Manager Scott's theater last evening. From the rise of the curtain until the close of the performance there was not a moment that could be recorded as conducive of yawning and restlessness that sometimes results from witnessing performances that are made up of good, bad and indifferent features. With Thatcher, Primrose & West everything is not only new and novel but wonderful and interesting."

MONUMENT MATTERS.

MONUMENT, June 7, 1889

The Eastonville World is deeply aggrieved at the treatment the Eastonville base ball club received at the hands of the Monument club. On investigating the matter we find that the Monument club not only paid the bills for the Eastonville club but paid for the friends of that club also. Mr C. E. Wentworth met the club on their arrival at this place and took charge of their over coats, also several six-shooters. We have no idea why the six-shooters were deemed necessary as Monument is a quiet and law abiding place where fire arms are regarded as being useless property. The Eastonvilles hired several men from other places and even then were badly beaten. The change of umpires was due to the fact that the Eastonville man admitted fearlessly that he did not understand the game hence the appointment of R. C. Herrick, of Monument as umpire in his place. We can readily understand that the loss of the game even with hired professionals must have been mortifying to the people of Eastonville. But as regards the laws of courtesy on the part of our boys, there is certainly a mistake. With the exception of a fifty cent stable bill all the expenses of the Eastonville club were cheerfully paid, therefore the said R. B. C. had best turn their attention to more practice in the field before coming out again with a challenge. The club here all say that upon the occasion of their visit to Eastonville they were well treated, and that they fully intended to return the compliment on May 30, and exerted every effort to do so.

The ill feeling between Monument and Palmer Lake regarding the impounding of Monument horses and cattle at Palmer Lake is being amicably settled. The people here are willing to do the fair thing and the proposition of Mr. Carl Acton to herd the Monument cattle and keep them from coming into the city lots at an expense of twenty dollars per month, is meeting with the approbation of the stock owners. We trust that the difficulty heretofore existing will be amicably settled and that the rights of the citizens of both towns will be respected.

Milton B. Ochos and his friend, Mr Martin of the Midland R. R. were guests at this place on Sunday.

FATHER CURLEY.

A Venerable Priest Recently Passed Death's Door Now Recovering.

GEORGETOWN, Va., June 6.—Father James Curley, of Georgetown college, is in one of the most profound sleepers in America. His valuable contributions to science will, perhaps, never be fully appreciated save by the few scientists with whom he was in active correspondence during the vigorous prosecution of his work at the college. His observations to determine the exact longitude of Washington from Greenwich, made a half century ago, have recently been verified by the United States government astronomers, and accepted by those connected with the English royal observatory. He was a man of attainments in almost every branch of learning, and he was one of the most profound professors of philosophy and natural science in the United States. He is chiefly known to the world as a botanist and astronomer. He is a man of singular simplicity and purity of thought, diffident and retiring in manner.

REV. JAMES CURLEY.

Father Curley was born in Roscommon county, Ireland, Oct. 25, 1796.

The education Father Curley received as a boy was confined to the simplest rudiments of English, but later a fine mathematician came to his town, and young Curley, whose tastes were in that direction, eagerly absorbed whatever instruction he could obtain from the new teacher. In 1817 Mr. Curley came to this country, and for two years was a bookkeeper and clerk in one of the few large grocery stores of that day on Market street, in Philadelphia. The friend with whom he had come over from Ireland having gone to Frederick, Md., Mr. Curley [illegible] to the county academy there. He first came to Washington in April, 1830, and taught mathematics in a private school for about a year and a half. In the meantime he had resolved to become a priest, and to this [illegible] If for the severe course of study upon which he knew he must enter he studied Latin and French night under the guidance of two of the scholastics from Georgetown college. In September, 1832, he entered the college as a novitiate, and remained there for two years, when he was sent to Frederick to complete his theological studies, returning to Georgetown in 1834, after his ordination.

He has been connected with Georgetown college for sixty-two years, during six of which time he was an instructor.
